Keeps you up-to-date with your GMail accounts as well as your favorites feeds Up2Date is a small tray program that takes care of the tedious job of synchronizing your various mail accounts. The most interesting feature is that Up2Date will notify you about new mail in your accounts, but at the same time it will automatically keep your main list of your favorite feeds current as well. Up2Date does not attempt to reinvent the wheel, but rather it is focused on taking care of the tedious tasks that get in the way of an enjoyable email life. Up2Date Features: -The main window is a tray icon that is always visible- Click to bring up a window that can contain several windows- A simple to use but powerful feed reader. The main window shows all the feeds that Up2Date finds from your accounts.- A simple interface, but with everything that you need to stay up-to-date.- A quick check when you log in, to see if your mail settings are up to date with what Up2Date knows about your account.- Keeps track of your mail accounts (a database file is generated) so that you do not have to- A few templates for new mail- The ability to easily sync your feeds to other mail programs (up2date-junction) Up2Date License: GNU General Public License Up2Date Contact: If you have questions or suggestions for Up2Date, please send email to up2date-devel@lists.sourceforge.net or go to up2date.com For commercial support and a free trial version, please email support@up2date.com Up2Date Up2Date Email Support: There have been many programs that have offered various ways of synchronizing feeds. However, none has satisfied my needs, until Up2Date.

Up2Date is the first program to address the issues that I wanted to see addressed. It can keep multiple feeds current and it keeps a database of accounts so that it can create new feeds as I add accounts. The initial design goal of Up2Date was to take care of some of the tasks that many people do on their own, but these tasks
