State of the Race: Donald Trump Keeps His House

By Ed O'Keefe

When Americans cast their ballots on Tuesday, a lot of people are likely to be voting to support Donald Trump. It seems like a lot for a candidate who has yet to win a single state, much less the nomination, to say—but it's true. In the end, he was the one who won in the most important delegate states, and he's the only candidate who can take down Hillary Clinton in the delegate count in the end. In fact, the only question in this race is whether that will be enough for him to win. Clinton is set to win in most of the states that are voting, though there's a lot of doubt about whether she'll win Michigan and Arizona. Beyond that, there's only one way for Trump to win: for Trump to win all the states that are still voting. As of 11:30pm CT last night, Trump had 524 pledged delegates (plus an additional 17 unpledged delegates from Arizona and Florida), compared to 924 for Clinton. But Trump only has 16% of the remaining delegates (in other words, the superdelegates), compared to 43% for Clinton. Trump has a long way to go to win the delegates he needs. The math looks something like this: Clinton: 394 delegates currently Trump: 125 currently He needs to win 79% of the states

Combination chemotherapy of fluorouracil and 5-fluorouracil (5-FU) with or without leucovorin (LV) has been one of the most effective regimens as adjuvant chemotherapy for patients with colorectal cancer. We examined the advantage of administering high-dose single-agent fluorouracil (HD-FU) in a combination with oral LV. Fifty patients with curatively resected colorectal cancer were evaluated.
